We're using a "flipped classroom" style, with asynchronous videos for content delivery, and activities during the live meeting. Has this been successful for you, or would you prefer to use the live sessions for lecturing?

“With some of the problems on the response form (like calculation problems) I think it would be helpful to see the type of problem done out fully before we have to solve the same type of problem on the response form. We often have to go over response form problems in class because they weren't done out fully in the lecture and people are confused.”

“I think instead of the Q&A session, a more helpful use of time would be to go over more content from the videos. It would be sooooo helpful if we could do examples before labs too.”

“I like the videos and find them very helpful and easy to follow, but having them uploaded to the calendar by the end of the class preceding them would be really helpful, so I don't have to keep checking to make sure I didn't miss one.”
How would you rate the difficulty of the in-class activities (handouts & labs)?
